Pakistan's Needs

The Indian Foreign Ministry spokesman, J.N. Dirit, responded that Mrs. Gandhi "accepted the premise that it was the discretion of every country to take care of its security needs." But he added that not insensitive to the security needs of Pakistan, had informed Mrs. Thatcher "that the enormous flow of arms to Pakistan has always within the Indian experience set back the cause of peace."

On the development of a Rapid Deployment Force by the United States, Mrs. Thatcher was described by her press aide as having sought to reassure Mrs. Gandhi that it was never intended solely for the Middle East or the Gulf. but as a force that could move speedily to deal with problems wherever they arose.

Mr. Ingham said that it was Mrs. Thatcher's view that if "you do not have a Rapid Deployment Force you will not be able to deploy rapidly" and that she had said there was no suggestion that it would be deployed without regional consultation. India's 'Anxieties'

Mr. Dixit, the Indian spokesman, said that on this point Mrs. Gandhi did note India's "anxieties and concerns on declared U.S. views of developments in this nciehborhood." Eric Gonsalves, the Indian foreign secretary, flew to Washington on Tuesday to meet with State Department officials. Before he left he said he would be seeking explanations for Washington's naval and military programs in and around the Indian Ocean.

According to Mr. Ingham, Mrs. Thatcher sought to impress upon Mrs. Gandhi that the Reagan administration was in the process of formulating its foreign policy and that it was, in the press aide's words, "wisely taking its own time."

There were indications that Mrs. Thatcher, as a visitor to a former colony, was seeking to stress historic associations, shared democratic traditions and commonly held values. Mrs. Gandhi seemed more inclined to stress the differ-

Polish Panel Supports Farmers' Call for Union

From Agency Dupatches
WARSAW — The Polish government announced Thursday night that a parliamentary commission had recommended legalization of an independent union for the country's 3.5 million private farm-

The announcement on national television was made after farmers campaigning for union rights occupied a public building in the city of Inowroclaw. The protesters, 20 of whom were staging a hunger strike, had called on authorities to send a government commission to the nearby city of Bydgoszcz, scene of a monthlong sit in pro-test, to resolve their dispute.

State television reported that a government team — headed by Trade Union Affairs Minister Stanislaw Ciosek and Deputy Agriculture Minister Andrzej Kacala had been sent from Warsaw to open new talks in Bydgoszcz.

The government's announce-ment said that Jan Szczepanski head of the Sejm (parliament) committee set up to examine the farmers' demands, had recommended that their right to form an independent union be included in the new trade union law.

Not a Disruption

The occupation of the Inowroclaw headquarters of the pro-government United Peasants Party was staged in a show of sympathy for the Bydgoszcz protesters. It was the first unrest since the par-liament called last week for a 60day respite from strikes and labor er of the protest in Bydgoszcz, said earlier Thursday that the takeover in Inowroclaw did not constitute a rebuff either to parliament or to Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski, who initially sought the moratorium.

ment did not take the problem of the farmers seriously.

Meanwhile, a drive to make Poland's Communist Party more democratic appeared to have gained momentum Thursday with favorable reaction in the official media to the formal emergence of a grass-roots reform movement.

Out of Touch

The movement - unusual by East European Communist standards because it has its origins among the rank and file, and not in the party apparatus - neld an inaugural national conference Wednesday in the city of Torun, about 100 miles (160 kilometers) south of Gdansk. Delegates claiming to represent one-third of Poland's 3 million Communists complained that the party leadership had lost touch with rank-and-file mission by its organizers manded thorough democratization leadership at the next Central Committee meeting to be held this month. They also demanded that the Central Committee meeting be televised live.

The delegates at the gathering — called the Party Organizations'

The government newspaper Zycie Warszawy said the Torun meeting, which drew together for the first time delegates from thousands of grass-roots party organizations, had legitimized the horizontal movement in the party, a contrast to the hierarchy-directed style of Soviet Communism.

Stanislaw Kania, the Polish party leader, declared an invitation to attend the Torun meeting, but some Central Committee members and a former Politburo member, Andrzej Werblan, did attend - an indication that at least some sectors of the party hierarchy were prepared to live with the new The official party daily Trybuna Ludu expressed formal acceptance of the grass-roots movement, saying: "These structures are now a fact of life, a new quality in the life of the party and an important, albeit still fluid development."

The immediate repercussions of the delegates' demands at the Torun meeting are expected to surface at the next party plenum. More far-reaching effects, however, are likely to come up at the party's national congress, which is due to be held before July 20.

Mr. De Cueller was met Wednesday by Afghan Foreign Minister Shah Mohammed Dost, land's second-quarter debts is viewed by bankers as only an interim measure pending a longerterm agreement on ways Poland could repay its debts.

The banks also set up a special group Thursday to examine Poland's shattered economy in cooperation with the Polish authorities.

Poland's exports to non-Communist countries dropped 28 percent in the first quarter from the 1980 period. Industrial and agricultural output has fallen and the country's foreign exchange reseves are thought to be very slim.

The banks want to see how the Warsaw authorities plan to raise output in order to cut reliance on imports while exporting enough to earn the foreign currency needed to pay Poland's debts.

The banks' position is thought to have been affected by the willingness of Poland's 15 main Western government creditors to come to Warsaw's assistance.

At a meeting last week in Paris, the governments agreed there was a good chance of delaying repayment of government-guaranteed debt by the end of this month.

Poland wants Western nations and Japan to reschedule $4.4 billion of official debt and is seeking $3.4 billion in new export credits to finance the current account balance of payments deficit it expects

Youth Vote: An Imponderable in France's Presidential Race

By Richard Eder New York Times Service

PARIS — France's first presidential elections in seven years, by most available indications, find the young voters in a state of pessimism, and disposed somewhere between refusal and acquiescence

It is considerably more than a decade since young Parisians took over the country's attention with the slogan of "Power to Imagination," assemblies that would re-draw the world, and cobblestone battles with the police. Paris has been paved over since, and not long ago a young engineer remarked:
"Is there anything that is still worth taking a paving stone on the head for?"

Studies of young people find them here, as elsewhere, somewhat more conservative than those of a decade ago, a bit more religious and more absorbed in their private lives. With the unemployment rate of those under 24 standing at more than twice the general average, the effort to find a job or hold onto one is consuming.

In the close presidential race, with three candidates given a recognized chance of winning -- President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, 54; his conservative rival, Jacques Chirac, 48; and the Socialist. Francois Mitterrand, 64 - the youth vote is an imponderable of at least statistical significance. Because the voting age was lowered from 21 to 18 after Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's election in 1974, about 1 million new voters - 17 percent of the total - are eligible to cast ballots April 26.

Warnings on Poland

How many will vote is another question. One-third have not registered; the others tell the poll-sters that they are more likely than the population as a whole to vote for candidates of the left. Mr. Mitterrand will benefit; so will Georges Marchais. 60, the Communist candidate, and two or three candidates representing the environmental movement and extreme leftist groups.

This could be decisive in an election where Mr. Giscard d'Estaing seems to be in trouble, where Mr. Mitterrand's progress falls short of the decisive, and where Mr. Chirac, although advancing, has to make up a long lead by the others.

Certainly the candidates are trying to get the youth vote. The president, a fastidious and aloof man who favors baroque music, appeared at a carefully organized youth rally in Paris where, to the accompaniment of crashing rock music, he announced his sympathy and support.

Large Issues Missing

Mr. Marchais had a more proletarian rally in the Place de la Bastille. Mr. Chirac announced that he would repeal the motorcycle tax. Mr. Mitterrand, who devotes considerable energy to avoiding the obvious, held no youth rally, but his platform includes a number of points aimed at younger voters. So much for the effort. The response is more amorphous and harder to predict. If the election has so far failed to arouse much real excitement among the French as a whole, it seems to be leaving

No large issues have been offered that would either enlist or repel the youth vote. All the candidates offer improvements in employment and housing, but it is hard to tell whether any are believed. Studies show that young Frenchmen distike military service and detest the prospect of war, but not one of the major candidates proposes to weaken France's defense policy or abolish conscription.

Ecology remains a strong interest among many of the young, but here again they have few choices. There is an ecology candidate, Brice Lalonde, 35, who shows no signs of getting many votes. As for the major candidates, Mr. Marchais is just as strong as Mr. Giscard d'Estaing for nuclear power, Mr. Mitterrand says only that he will rethink the mat-

"We have seen these people all our lives," said Anne Limondin, a 24-year-old secretary of middleclass background. "We know them as we know our parents." She was one of eight young people assembled for an informal discussion

Their selection was haphazard; they were friends, and more or less brought each other along. Half considered themselves on the left, the other half on

Miss Limondin's point seems to be a principal one. After the 1974 election, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing became president and Mr. Chirac was his prime minister. Mr. Mitterrand and Mr. Marchais led the two main opposition groups. All have been in the forefront of national politics longer than that: Mr. Mitterrand held his first Cabinet post more than 30

As a result, young voters think of the four candidates as the men their parents voted for, or against there is no new figure they can identify with.

Lack of Conviction

Another point to emerge was that not one of the eight planned to vote for Mr. Giscard d'Estaing. The four on the left said, with varying enthusiasm, that they would support the Socialists. The four on the right, including Miss Limondin, tended to favor Mr. Chirac — again, without great conviction.

The feeling against the president had its ideological side, particularly on the left. But it seemed to be more personal and emotional than anything cise. "It's the way he acts, not like a president but like a monarch," Miss Limondin said.

Xavier Duplantier, a 27-year-old architect who will vote for Mr. Chirac, complained of Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's lack of ideological passion.

"Under De Gaulle and Pompidou we had a government of political ideas," Mr. Duplantier said. "For the past seven years it has been a government of technicians. A leader must provide inspiration. A government without political ideas makes people indifferent."

Vice President Bush's remark about the possibility of a veto by Mr. Reagan was made to newspa-per editors and broadcasters. They had been invited to the White House for meetings intended to persuade them that the president's economic program should be passed intact.

Mr. Bush was asked if Mr. Reagan would use the veto to enforce his demand for a three-year tax cut. Committee, said this week that three Treasury Department offi-cials had indicated Mr. Reagan was ready to bargain on the duration of the tax cut.

On Wednesday, White House spokesmen insisted no compromise was needed because, as Mr. Speakes put it, "we have changed the focus of the debate from whether to how much" on the question of tax cuts.

The line that the Democrats are "coming to us" on budget and tax questions was devised by James A. Baker 3d, the White House chief of staff, who has authority over White House political operations. Its corollary is that pressure from legislators' constituents at home will force congressional opponents to support the president's economic plans as the price of political survival

The no-compromise campaign has silenced administration figures and congressional allies who until this week were quietly laying the groundwork for a compromise on the duration of the tax cut. It has also made administration leaders prickly about any disagreement

Scientists Find Snail Darter in 2 More Rivers The Associated Press

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Biologists say they have found snail darters in two more Tennessee rivers and are considering whether to ask that the small fish no longer be considered an endangered species.

Because of the darter's endangered status under federal law, courts in 1977 ordered work halted for more than two years on the Tennessee Valley Authority's $136-million Tellico Dam. The dam's gates were closed, creating a 16,000-acre lake, in November, 1979, after Congress and the White House exempted the project from the Endangered Species Act.

Biologists said Tuesday that they have found darters on three occasions in the past month in the Sequatchie River and Sewee Creek, which flow into the Tennessee River. A team of state, federal and university biologists is meeting April 22 to discuss the findings.

Team members said they will discuss whether to recommend to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service that the darter's status be downgraded to "threatened," a step be-low endangered.

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Space agency officials have reported that the condition of the winged spaceship Col-umbia is excellent and that it should be capable of making at least 100 round trips into orbit. George F. Page, the director of shuttle operations, said that the Columbia's condition "surpassed what most of us thought it would

At a news conference, Donald K. Slayton, the orbital flight test manager, said: "Overall, we're happy about the performance of the whole system. I see no reason why we can't have 100 missions with this machine, probably more than that.

Mr. Slayton reported that there was "some minor damage" on several tiles, caused by " a combination of the lift-off and the landing and rollout." But he added: "All the damage looks like it's repair-

Intensive Questioning

On Tuesday night, technicians the Dryden Flight Research Center at Edwards Air Force Base began preparing the spaceship for its return to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida next week. It will be ferried atop a modified Boeing 747 iumbo iet.

The astronauts, Navy Capt.

Robert L. Crippen and John W. Young, rested Wednesday but were expected to begin five days of intensive questioning Thursday at the Johnson Space Center in Houston. They were flown there shortly after the successful completion of their mission, the maiden orbital test flight of the first reusable

Mr. Slayton said that based on preliminary assessments, the Columbia should be ready for a return to space by September or October. Eventually, the turnaround times between flights should be a matter of weeks, but not until after the planned four-mission test program, which the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has scheduled to be concluded by late next year.

The shuttle was designed for 100 flights, though some of its subsys-tems will have to be replaced or refurbished in a shorter period of time. The three main engines were designed for 55 flights, and the heat-resistant tiles that coat much of the vehicle were expected to need considerable attention in the shuttle's lifetime.

A more detailed examination of the delicate silica tiles will be made after the Columbia reaches its hangar at the Kennedy Space Cen-ter. This would include pull tests. in which extreme vacuum pressures are applied to see if the tiles are still securely bonded to the Columbia's aluminum skin, All repairs or replacements of tiles will be made at the Florida facility.

Even though the Columbia apparently exceeded everyone's ex-pectations, Mr. Slayton said that there was no plan to accelerate or shorten the test program.

"We're looking at whether we need four flights before going operational," he said, "but we probably will need them."

Reagan Pardons 2 Ex-Agents in Break-In

By Robert L. Jackson and Ronald J. Ostrow Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has granted full pardons to two former high-ranking FBI officials who were convicted last November of authorizing secret break-ins in a search for fugitive

The president said that his pardoning of the two men — W. Mark Felt and Edward S. Miller which he took outside the usual channels established by the Department of Justice, was based on their good-faith belief that their actions were necessary to preserve the security interests of our coun-"If judges would spend more time cleaning up trials — making sure that the trial is a search for

John W. Nields Jr., a Washington attorney who served as special prosecutor against Mr. Felt and Mr. Miller for acts that they committed in 1972-73, reacted angrily to the pardons and said that contrary to normal practice, he had not been consulted.

"Whoever is responsible doesn't know what the facts are and hasn't read the record," Mr. Nields said. 'It doesn't bespeak the kind of values that I've come to associate with this president, who I think very highly of."
Mr. Nields said: "There isn't

ATLANTA - Relations between local police officials and the FBI have grown more tense after an FBI agent's comments to a Macon. Ga., civic club that four of Atlanta's 23 murdered children had been killed by their parents because they had been considered nuisances.

The agent, Michael Twibell, was unavailable Wednesday. The FBI had no comment on the matter. Atlanta's public safety commissioner, Lee P. Brown, angrily termed the agent's statements "unprofessional and uncalled for." He added, "We do not know who killed the children.

Mr. Brown would not discuss the validity of Mr. Twibell's claims, only their propriety. For several weeks, highly placed sources familiar with the operations of the task force investigating the 23 deaths and two disappearances have said privately that there were possible suspects in four of the cases. "This concern is buttressed by our finding that 43 percent of those employees who actually came forward to report wrongdoing said the reported abuses were not corrected," said Ruth T. Prokop, the head of the govern-ment board.

The quasi-judicial Merit Sys-tems Protection Board was created in 1978 to shield "whistleblowers" in government. Last spring the board began an evaluation to determine how well these protections were working.

The survey results seem to confirm to a large degree one of the major platforms of Ronald Reagan's campaign for the presidency, that the government is rife with fraud, waste and mismanage-ment and that major savings can be had by simply tightening con-trols. The three-member board is made up of two Democrats and one Republican, all appointed by President Jimmy Carter. The survey discovered that of the 30 percent who reported such activity, one-fifth felt they had been victims of reprisal due to their disclosures. The survey was distributed to 13,000 U.S. employees in 15 different agencies, and more than 8,500 responses were received. Mrs. Prokop would not list specific

Realigning the Soviet Universe

In the 16th century, Nicolas Copernicus of Torun rearranged the universe by putting the sun at the center of our solar system with the planets, including Earth, spinning around it. In doing so, he also rearranged man's psyche. The human species was no longer at the center. It was just riding another rock pile orbiting the life-giving sun. Now, on an earthbound scale, a similar revolution is under way in 20th century Torun. The rank and file of the Polish Communist Party has rejected Lenin's doctrine of democratic centralism. which puts the party where Copernicus put the sun. The emphasis has been sharply shifted from centralism to democratic. Power, the Polish party members are saying, should flow upward from the people, not downward from the leadership. That is an idea as daring in its context as was the Copernican revolution. Its implications are as profound in their way forfor the 20th century as were the implications of Copernicus's discovery for the 16th, and perhaps as irreversible.

In some ways, the latest development in the upheaval that began with the founding of the Solidarity free trade union in Gdansk's Lenin Shipyard last August, forces us to put the Polish events in a larger historical perspective. The fact that it took place in Torun, Copernicus's birthplace, contributes superficially to that need. But the nature of the development, itself, is what really does it. The Polish Communists are now challenging the very essence of the system under which the Soviet Union manages its empire. Without central control by the Communist Party, who will see to it that Moscow's designs are carried out? Who will prevent purely national interests from taking precedence over Soviet bloc interests in the economic, political or military spheres? The obvious answer is that There is nothing more dangerous intellec-tually than writing instant history, but it seems relatively safe to say that when the record of decline in the Soviet-run socialist world is written, it will not be seen to have begun in Torun, or even Gdansk. Historians will find the seeds of decline mixed with those that nurtured the empire's growth. The threads of their research will then run through Berlin, 1953, Budapest and Warsaw, 1956, and Prague, 1968, earlier examples of worker revolt, nationalism and efforts to change the party. But in none of those previous cases was the system challenged by the masses as it is now being challenged in Poland. Solidarity has 10 million members. The Polish Communist Party has three million members. There is some overlap, but together they represent more than a third of the entire Polish population. And together they are presenting themselves as the true forces of democratic socialism.

The Soviet leaders can no longer deal with that situation by lopping off the party's head. From their perspective, the whole body is now infected. They will inevitably fear that the disease will spread like plague, condemning their empire from within. Moscow might succeed in postponing the Polish party congress a bit longer; it might even succeed in moderating some of the grass-roots demands for the introduction of democratic procedures. But it cannot stop the momentum that has now gathered without military intervention, with all its attendant risks. That intervention may well come, but popular support for democratization in Poland is so widespread that its result is now unpredictable. The conservative old men in the Kremlin are surely pondering that.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

China Is Not a Card

Little can be said for the idea of threatening arms sales to China every time someone in Washington feels the urge to annoy the Kremlin. And a lot can be said against it. Agreed: few other gestures would so arouse and anger the Soviet government, which already feels compelled to keep 46 divisions stationed along its long frontier with China. But whatever the value of adding to Soviet fears would be offset by the reaction in China and in the rest of the world.

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger said last week that the sale of arms to China had "not yet" been ruled out as a possible response to a Soviet military intervention in Poland. The Carter administration felt the same impulse when casting about for ways to respond to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The idea ought finally to be dropped.

The pace of "normalizing" relations with China over the last decade is unquestionably a function of the fierce tension between Mostherefore, a factor in the worldwide Soviet-American rivalry. Whichever of these three powers must stand against the other two is at an obvious disadvantage. But the triangle does not have equal sides. Only the Soviet Union and the United States are superpowers with global interests and the capacity to destroy each other. They need to find their own stable relationship whatever their success or failure with China.

In any case, it would hardly be a sign of U.S. strength to have to turn to China for a way to twit or damage the Soviet Union. China would be contemptuous of such an ally. The rest of the world would scoff.

And there are practical arguments. No plausible amount of aid to China could in fact alter the Sino-Soviet power balance. It would cost at least $40 billion, the Pentagon thinks, to give China a capacity to repel a non-nuclear Soviet attack. All the loose talk about playing this particular China card really concerns only token help, sufficient perhaps to provoke the Russians psychologically but accomplishing little strategically.

China is neither a card nor a pawn. To talk casually about a proud nation as if it were an obliging satrap demeans China and devalues U.S. diplomacy. If China is to be sold any U.S. arms, the matter should be weighed on its merits, not as an anti-Soviet ploy. It would be useful if whoever really speaks for this administration finally said just that.

Some Radicalism in Quebec

The voters of Ouebec have re-elected a supposedly radical government because they want to keep things as they are. It's true that the winning party, the Parti Quebecois, is led by people who would like to see the province separate itself from the rest of Canada to become an independent nation. But when they put that question to a referendum last spring, the voters said no. The PQ has promised not to revive the referendum issue in the fiveyear term that now begins. And yet things-asthey-are means a great deal of distance, not to say tension, between Quebec and the Canadian federal government in Ottawa.

There's no real inconsistency between the rejection of separatism last year and the reelection of the separatist government this year. The Parti Quebecois has given the province rigorously clean and competent government, and that purely local and unpartisan issue had as much to do with the outcome as anything else. Occasionally the PQ shakes its fist at big business, which means business run by English-speaking Canadians. As long as there's no actual threat of separation, Quebec prefers the separatists.

Canada seems to be evolving into a loose confederation of regional interests. The old quarrel over Quebec's special standing has been overshadowed, within the past year, by other issues raised by other provinces. Alberta has been engaged in a vehement row with Ottawa over energy policy and oil price controls. Most of the provinces are actively challenging the federal government over a proposed reform of the constitution - the central question being, inevitably, the provinces'

In all the other industrial democracies, political authority is being increasingly centralized in the national government. In the United States, the states, over the past generation, have become much weaker in relation to Washington. Canada, with its vast territory and dispersed population, is the sole exception, as it devolves more latitude to provinces strongly marked by their ethnic and economic differences. The Quebec vote supports and strengthens that trend.

On Destabilizing Pakistan

Pakistan's future role in international affairs will mainly be dictated by the way its internal conditions develop. At present, Gen. Zia ul-Haq is managing to retain power by adhering to a strict Islamic line and laws based on the Koran, hoping by that means to avoid the religious unrest in the cities that toppled Mr. Bhutto, while at the same time pleasing his Arab friends and financiers. - From the Neue Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

Few singers are more popular in America than Mme. Schumann Heink. Coming originally to the United States as a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, she quickly won favor. The announcement that she would leave grand opera for the comic opera stage caused a sensation in musical circles. She starred successfully in a comic opera by American authors. Mme. Schumann-Heink said she had not chosen artistic careers for her sons. "I want them first of all to be Americans," she said. "I rather think they will go into business."

NEW YORK - "Play ball!" Record throngs, homeruns, steady pitching — even good weather. Everything contributed to make the opening of the major league baseball season one of the most auspicious. The New York Yankees-Boston Red Sox game drew 70,000. Before a tremendous mob of howling lans. Babe Ruth demonstrated irrevocably that spring training and close attention to the reduction of the belt-line had brought him into real form. HUNGARY

The silent collapse in Geneva of yet another UN conference - this time on a technology transfer code - in an indication of things to come. A potentially more conse-quential clash over basic issues is in the cards for the general assem-bly of the World Health Organizaiton (WHO) in May, when a draft code for banning advertisements of certain baby foods will be up for consideration.

"I am not sure that the proposed code is covered by the organiza-tion's statutes, but I have no doubt that WHO has the supranational authority to bridge such a possible gap," a member of WHO's execu-tive board said at its recent meeting. And while the official voiced a real problem, his expectation of a convenient solution is unfounded. All UN specialized agencies — including WHO - have been set up strictly as service organizations which can perform certain duties within their field of speciality and statutory competence if invited by sovereign member states.

A Trend

Nevertheless, a trend persists toward turning these UN organizations into supranational instru-ments. This has become evident with the mushrooming "codes of conduct" and "gentlemen's agreements." More and more, these codes infringe on the rights and responsibilities of sovereign nations. And even though they seem to provide helpful responses to real problems and thus are quite innocentlooking, they seldom bode well for developing countries in particular. For they also constitute highly effective back-door tutelage instruments, and their number is growing rapidly even in unsuspected fields. Indeed, they are mostly beyond the control and influence of national legislators. And this, in part, may also explain the fact that they increasingly overlap, undercut or even contradict themselves.

Particularly galling are those cases involving UN agencies which have been "turned around," i.e., although they were explicitly intended to help the developing countries bridge the growing gaps that sepa-rate them from the more advanced countries in technological and eco-nomic key fields, they now serve, or are about to be used as a frame or vehicle for opposite measures and purposes. Powerful member states and, more recently, even pri-vate pressure groups, have thus found them suitable for mounting crusades for seemingly just causes some with disastrons side-effects, particularly for developing

Nuclear Energy

Consider the case of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), which was set up to "accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace health and prosperity throughout the world ..., bearing in mind the special needs of the underde-veloped areas of the world." Yet, under the pretext of misconstrued security imperatives, and with such codes as the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) and the London Suppliers' Club "Export Guidelines," the IAEA's objective and work were undermined, some solidly enrooted and successful commercial norms and practices were bent and changed unilaterally, and the free flow of trade and technologies was cut in an important Predictably and most alarmingly, key interests of both developing and industrialized countries have thus been jeopardized, and mutual confidence and the rule of law in international commerce have suffered. As such, these codes have themselves become significant sources of international tension.

Or take the case of the bogge down negotiations about a "code of conduct on the transfer of technology." If and when this special United Nations Conference on Trade and Development conference will resume its protracted work, it may require new ideas and some basic reconsiderations on both sides of the vast remaining gaps before a meaningful and mu-mally beneficial new instrument can seriously be contemplated. Paris, from the micro-technology and the above-mentioned nuclear front seem to have gone essentially unnoticed. These include:

1. Any agreement on any subject will remain useful to its parties only to the extent that its authors have succeeded in formulating such mutually beneficial principles which will remain valid even under changed circumstances.

2. No amount of contract de-tails, and no code in the world can substitute the confidence each signatory must have in his partner.

3. No technology transfer contract has ever been, or will be con-cluded and carried out simply because of any code, legislative norm or other guidelines.

Rather, they have come into being despite these handcuffs, and they will continue to do so only if when conditions are right and ripe. So if the objective is indeed enhanced transfers of relevant technology — even nuclear — importers, legislators, and administrators might be well advised to look out less for theoretical solutions and essentially self-serving codes, than for direct discussions with those technology sellers capable and willing to share the opportunities and risks of such transnaAs a last example, take again the proposed WHO advertisement code. Even though its purported goal on the promotion of infant breast-feeding is universally ac-cepted, this is clearly a matter over which each member state has exclusive jurisdiction — and which thus falls outside the legal compe-tence of WHO.

For the "legislative body" of WHO, it would therefore be out of order to treat this text differently countries. from other WHO working papers. Its elevation to a WHO regulation or recommendation would directly undercut the national sovereignty, and be in conflict with member states' prerogatives, laws and inter-

Publicity Objective

This is not to criticize the case for the case for breast-feeding quite the contrary. But, first, the publicity objective of the proposed code has essentially already been attained, and nothing justifying its negative effects could be gained with its formal adoption. And secondly, this draft code is clearly "off target," for — in the words of a WHO executive board member from a developing country - "the real problem is one of general mainutrition, particularly of the woman who is breast-feeding." Indeed, the code could not reasonably be expected to alleviate in the least this persisting key problem of widespread malnutrition. In fact, it would divert scarce resources from more appropriate programs -- providing adequate food to sursing mother—developed on a coopera-tive basis among the national health anthonities and the interested parties. Moreover, it would not counter the objectives of other codes and of other international organizations, such as UNIDO, GATT and UNCTAD; it would discourage technology transfers and the creation and operation of in-dustrial enterprises in developing

A WHO regulation or recommendation is meant to be univer-sally binding — either legally or morally. Does an ill-considered code with such glaring defects merit such a uniquely commanding status? The WHO general assem-bly has responsibilities of its own, including proper consideration of such and other legal, political and economic implications of any proposed measure.

In summary: What we need is not more instruments of tutelage as additional sources of conflicts, but better and properly coordinated information, liberation of trade and commerce from pentical constraint, and, above all, as enhanced sense of personal responsibility and a willingness and expandity to carry out already existing mutually beneficial agreements.

Taxing Americans Abroad

By Bill Archer

XIASHINGTON — In the competitive world of international trade, the United States can't afford to be its own worst en-

Changes made in the Internal Revenue Code in 1976 have greatly reduced the number of U.S. citizens employed abroad by American companies. Declining numbers of Americans working in foreign countries reduces U.S. competitiveness in overseas markets, costs billions of dollars annually in lost export sales, and aggravates dostic unemploymen

According to a July, 1980, study by an organization of consultants international business practices, the number of Americans em-ployed abroad by 306 U.S. companies decreased by 38.6 percent be-tween June, 1979, and June, 1980. The basic problem is that the United States is the only major industrialized country that taxes the overseas income of its citizens.

Examples presented in Congressional hearings last year by the U.S. Overseas Tax Fairness Committee, a lobby that represents construction contractors that build overseas, clearly shows the scope of the problem.

One engineering firm reported that on March 27, 1980, it had 103

View From Pakistan The news item concerning Niger uranium sales (IHT, April 13) maintains that, according to Western sources, some of the uranium purchased by Libya "may have been passed on to Pakistan or other countries that are feared to be developing nuclear weapons." It is surprising that despite repeat-ed categorical statements on the subject issued by high-level authors in Pakistan, some Western media continue to suspect the country of developing nuclear weapons.

We may stress once again that Pakistan's nuclear research and development program is not designed to manufacture arms but to provide for the country's growing energy needs and minimize its dependence on imported oil. These imports at present consume an exive portion (40 percent) of Pakistan's limited foreign earnings. Obviously, the country has to do all it can to conserve its resources and attain self-reliance, in energy as in many other critical sectors of its developing economy, M.H. ASKARI,

The Chase Econometrics survey ed that 40 percent of its overseas staff consisted of Americans before 1976, as compared to 17 percent in 1980. In a June, 1980, study by Chase Econometrics, a Saudi Arabian diplomat said that in 1976, 65 percent of the employees of U.S. firms operating in Saudi Arabia were Americans. By 1980, the figure had dropped to 35 percent.

In the congressional hearings, a U.S. company testified that it had based its bid on a contract in Sandi Arabia on the need to use Americans in key positions. The Sandi government asked that the bid be re-submitted using non-American personnel because of savings in labor costs. Eventually, 62 non-Americans were hired for the work. The problem was that the cost to the Saudis of using Americans amounted to an additional $10,000 to $12,000 a year per per-son, largely because of U.S. tax treatment of its citizens working

In order for American employees to receive the same after-tax spendable income as other nationals working for U.S. companies these firms are forced to pay the U.S. citizens far higher salaries than they pay the non-Americans. In the competitive world of international trade, this results in either lost contracts for U.S.-pro-duced goods and services or lost jobs for U.S. citizens if the compsnies are to compete successfully for overseas contracts.

When foreign nationals replace Americans in oversess jobs, the United States loses related exports of products and services because of the tendency of non-American employees to rely on their native countries for necessary goods and services. U.S. influence in overseas industry and commerce is reduced as the number of U.S. employees iem at our own peril. Economical-indicated that this self-imposed handicap already had tost the United States billions of dollars in lost export sales - and for 1980 alone projected an estimated $6 billion in lost tax revenues from decreased sales, in addition, the study said, up to 80,000 Americans some of them displaced by Americans who return home, and others victims of economic decline.

While Republicans and Demo-crais in the 7th Congress may dis-agree on other issues, there is wide-spread agreement among both the liberals and conservatives that there is a simple solution.

In order to increase the American workforce overseas, it is necessary only to reduce the tax burden that they and their employers face. We could do this by eliminating totally the tax on foreign-earned income, which would put Ameriean workers on the same footing as other nationals. Or we can attempt to do so by exempting substantial amounts of foreign-earned income from taxation.

One House bill seeks a $75,000 exemption in foreign-earned in-come and provides for additional deductions for bonsing expenses in excess of $5,500. That hill is tosponsored by 49 House members, among them a majority of the Ways and Means committee, which has prisoliction over the leg-

B denying U.S. businesses a char se to compete on foreign scil-with their overseas competitors, we are intring no one but ourselves. The current condition of the U.S. economy demands that we take action on the overseas ployees taxation problem flow. Bill Archer, Republican of Texas,

Barbara Cartland's Royal Touch

New York Times Service
WILD HILL England — Barbara Cartland, the flamboyant queen of the romantic novel, is about to acquire a genuine royal connection. But with a reticence that has seldom been a feature of her long and remarkable career, Miss Cartland has resolved to say nothing about the coming marriage of her step-grand-daughter, Lady Diana Spencer, to Prince

Well, almost nothing.
"You see, my dear, they'll all die of fury if I say anything about it," the 79-year-old novelist explained over a sumptuous afternoon lea at her 400-acre estate north of London. "After all, I'm the only one who's got anything to sell, and I don't want people to say, 'Look there, she's just clinging to the royal bandwagon.'

A one-woman romance industry, Barbara Cartland does indeed have things to sell. Her basic work is books — she wrote 24 last year, mostly romantic novels with a single basic plot. At the moment, she is at work on her 305th book. She has sold 150 million copies of her books in more than a dozen language

Lately, concentrating on the U.S. market. she has branched out into curtains, sheets and wallpaper ("Decorating with love," the advertisements call it); a monthly magazine, Barbara Cartland's World of Romance, published in New York; a romantic comic strip appear-ing in 52 U.S. newspapers and a package of "romantic tours" to India, Britain [where the tour includes tea with Miss Cartland and lunch with Earl Spencer] and half a dozen other

Her daughter, Raine, is married to the eighth Earl Spencer, Lady Diana's father. In one of the five autobiographies that Miss Cartland has written, she describes the way Raine broke the news in 1976 that she was leaving her first husband, the Earl of Dartmouth, and would marry Earl Spencer, who had divorced Lady Diana's mother seven years earlier:

"It is just like one of your books, Mummy. I am wildly in love and there is nothing anyone father, Alexander McCorquodale, and married his first cousin, Hugh McCorquodale. Does she still keep in touch with the family of both her husbands? "No. I never liked the McCorquodales very much, and they didn't like me be-cause you see, in those days people didn't have divorces. They were furious that I married again into the family, but I was terribly happy with my second husband. We had 27 years to-gether before he died."

Barbara Cartland, with her bouffant halo of platinum hair, her extravagantly long false eye-lashes and her limitless talent for self-promotion, seems far from the pattern of the English Establishment grandmother. Monarchy-baiters are already speculating delightedly about how she will get along at the July 29 wedding with the staid royal family.

Yet beneath the thick mascara, the powder and the fluff, and discounting such props as the feather fan in a color she calls Cartland pink, she is a well-informed conversationalist with a wide range of interests.

Over the years, she has thrown her considerable prestige behind campaigns for the rights of such groups as old-age pensioners and gyp-sies. Her special interest, besides romance, has always been nutrition. Miss Cartland takes several dozen vitamin pills a day and thrives on such foods as honey, fruit sugar, Indian gin-seng and garlic, staunchly avoiding most medi-cines. She says she gets 10,000 letters a year about health and tries to answer them all.

Miss Cartland's dietary regime and her suspicion of modern medicine are easy to ridicule until you look into her clear, steady eyes and realize that she appears 20 years younger than she is and follows a work schedule that someone half her age might easily find daunting.

Most afternoons she writes, lying with a furry white rug on a couch under an ornate chan-delier in her bright blue, book-lined study. Writing lasts from precisely 1 to 3:30, and it consists of dictating one 7,000-word chapter -seldom more, seldom less - to a secretary sitting behind her, out of sight, psychiatrist style.

"I have the story in my head and I just tell it," she said. "Then the next day I just tell some more." Seven days of this produces a 50,000-word book, which is rushed into print and sent all over the world.

The plot line is standard: a young woman and an older, distinguished man, often a duke or other nobleman, fall in love in an exotic setting that Miss Cartland has thoroughly researched for historical and geographical accuracy. They always get married in the last few pages and never — but never — have sexual relations before that. "That's true romance," said Miss Cartland, who regards the virginity of her heroines as a kind of crusade for morality. "Fifteen years ago, the publishers said I should go modern and write about divorce and people getting into bed, but I said no. I know it happens, but it's not romantic. "So I hold to the old values, even though some people say 'Ha-ha-ha, virginity,' and I know I'm doing some good, beginning to have some impact. Every phone-in I do in America, mothers say: 'Thank you for those values. I've said exactly the same thing to my 13-year-old daughter, but she won't listen. She'll listen to you, though, Barbara Cartland, so thank

Super Disco Flashes Onto the Scene in Paris

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIS — The disco craze is gaining volume in France. Despite mutterings that the rock age is over, discotheques are growing in number, size and pandemonium.

The latest and the largest, if not the loudest, opened in Paris this week. It takes its name from Milan's illustrious opera house. La Scala. It stands, far from the customary nightlife terrain, in the shadow of the Louvre. It is probably big enough to contain both of its local forerunners, the Club 78, on the Champs-Elysees, and the Palace.

Its gigantic quarters have been scooped out of three stories of storerooms of the extinct emporium, the Magasins du Louvre, and its entrance is on the staid Rue de Rivoli. Beyond its marble reception hall is a dance floor wide enough to accommodate 400 rockers who gyrate before a towering silver mirrored curtain that reaches to the top of the building. Psychedelic rays of green, pink and lightning whiteness constantly pierce the demi-darkness. This futuristic vision, combined with amplified rumble, creates a science-fiction ambience. Stars stud the imposing background curtain.

The two upper stories are in gallery form and from them there is a bird's-eye view of the seething dance floor. The decor of the public rooms surrounding the balconies of the second and third levels is, in contrast, restful. With their gray-green color scheme, dark walls, smoked mirrors and Roman statuary, the scene might be that of a modish hixury hotel. In a passage stand slot machines and there is a retreat from the pounding din and dizzying electrical displays in an intimate bar, devoid of outside noise, where gentle jazz is rendered by a pianist. The larger California Club, another casis, has its own tone, somewhat American. It is under the auspices of Alain Rousseau, long a manager of San Francisco cabarets. At the moment, though the repertory of bars offers a wide variety of drinks, there is nothing to eat. However, preparations to open a supper club are under way.

Soft-Spoken Impresario

Maurice Molina, the creator and impresario of La Scala, is dark-haired, tallish, in his mid-30s. He is soft-spoken, courteous and without pretense. He shows a visitor the operations of the sound and lighting systems with understandable pride, but his manner is that of a captain conducting a tour of his

He has had a varied career. He left his native Gisors to oversee IBM machines in Lyons and on coming to Paris entered the hotel business. Not long ago he inaugurated two physical culture centers. They had the ns, steam rooms and swimming pools, but he lent them a cabaret touch by installing bars and restaurants.

He has spent three years in preparing his dream project. La Scala, acting as its administrator and artistic director. It has been a time-consuming job, but Molina, a man of many ideas, produced a film, "Un Escargot dans la tete," last year.

"It was a flop and I was disappointed," he confessed. "But I've lost interest in the cinema. If I find a script I like I'll produce it. As for the customers, there is a bit of everything. La Scala draws, of course, the dance-mad youngsters, but even here there are differing social degrees. There are women of Tout Paris in evening gowns and sloopily clad representatives of television. A punk with crazy hairdo flits by. In a corner are a set of red-faced young men fitted into dinner-jackets so snugly they look like frankfurt-ers in mourning. There are gay boys and their gay companions. By the balcony there is an old gentleman doing a two-step without partner to the rock accompaniment.

Entrance is 100 francs (about $20), which includes a drink. Refills are 35 francs. Though theoretically La Scala is open to the public, the receptionists judge who is to come in and who is not. Rejections are plentiful, the unwanted remaining to object before the

13 TV Channels Give Belgians Multilingual Choice Two main companies, Coditel

BRUSSELS — The inhabitants of Belgium may get the biggest multilingual selection of TV shows in the world. And the most soap sagas. "Dallas" three times a week in the original Texan, in French, and no doubt soon in German, is at their fingertips. "Ko-"Маппіх," Charlie's Angels," "Shirley and Laverne," are eternally on view. Henry VIII and Edward VIII had their love lives bared exhaustively on channel after channel, in language after language.

The touch of a television dial brings into the living room three French channels, three German, two from the Netherlands, one from Luxembourg, and four Belgian, two of them French-language and two Flemish, making 13 available programs. The Dutch and Flemish channels all present U.S. and British programs in English with Dutch subtitles, avoiding expensive dubbing, since English is widely understood in both countries. Other nations have other policies: Germany can afford to dub what comes from abroad, the French are too chauvinist to allow anything to go out in a foreign lan-

But Britain, whose programs are greatly coveted by an increasingly avid public, has refused to allow direct retransmission without payment. The barrier of the English Channel prevents unauthorized filching as a transmitting appara-tus would have to be installed on the British side. Residents of the Belgian coast are within the radius of British transmissions, but the rest of Belgium has to accept what their own television and the Dutch buy from Britain and from the United States. That takes in a lot of programs. The Flemish and Dutch particularly appreciate the various British and U.S. situation comedies; the Dutch also like documentaries and current events. The U.S. elections were covered live in detail by both Dutch channels and in the days of Watergate those who could stay up late were enthralled by the drama unfolding on Dutch television in its original

Auditors Say Braniff May Not Survive

By Barbara Bry Los Angeles Times Service

NEW YORK - In another blow to Braniff International, the airline holding company's auditors have questioned its ability to stay in "There are conditions which indicate that the company may be unable to continue as a going con-cern," said the opinion written by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, a major accounting firm, in Braniff's 1980 annual report, released

After announcement of the opinion, the New York Stock Exchange briefly halted trading in Braniff stock. The stock then fell a point to close at 41/2 in heavy trad-

The company on Thursday announced its per share loss for the first quarter of 1981 was $1.23, a greater loss than the $1.10 per name in the last quarter of 1980.

The Dallas-based airline compaannounced a 1980 loss of $131.4 million. In addition, the auditors noted that as of Dec. 31, 1980, Braniff's current liabilities exceeded its current assets by $143.2 million, that long-term debt totaled $583.6 million and and that shareholder equity was $66.2 million, a substantial drop from the $198 million reported at the end of 1979.

In its annual report, Braniff said the company's continuation de-pends on its ability to reach an agreement with creditors to extend principal and interest payments. In addition, Braniff said it must generate enough cash flow to meet current bills as well as comply with the terms of various financing

Braniff noted that it has already obtained waivers of certain covenants until Sept. 30. The company also said private creditors have agreed to defer until July 1, 1981, all principal and interest payments due between Feb. 10 and June 30. And, the firm added, it is negotiating a restructuring of its debt bur-

Stumbling Block

One major stumbling block could be a requirement in loan agreements that Braniff's net worth be $175 million by Sept. 30, 1981, up from the $101.5 million reported at the end of 1980.

Securities analysts said the only way Braniff can raise the cash it needs - and increase its net worth — is by selling airplanes. Braniff has eight undelivered aircraft, including three Boeing 727s and five Boeing 727-200s, and surplus jet-liners including two older Boeing 747s and up to 10 Boeing 727-100s. U.K. Prices Rise 1.5% in March

LONDON - Britain's retail price index rose 1.5 percent in March compared with a February increase of 0.9 percent and was 12.6 percent higher than a year earlier, the Employment Department said Thursday.

The February year-on-year in-crease was 12.5 percent. The department said the steeper increase in the index in March, the largest in 10 months, was mainly the result of new taxes in the govern-ment budget, which accounted for more than two thirds of the rise. The increase brought the index to 284.0 (base January, 1974). The department said the March increase was at the lower end of analysts' expectations, and government officials said they are confident inflation will continue its downward trend in April. They said that even with the continuing impact of higher taxes in the budget, the April annual retail price in-crease should be about 12 percent.

Japan Automaker Decries Curbs Brock Says Reagan Won't Back Bill in Congress

TOKYO — One of Japan's top automakers Thursday rejected outright proposals to limit car exports to the United States to the 1978-79 levels.

'It is out of the question," Takashi Ishihara, chairman of the Japan Automobile Manufacturers' Association told a news conference. Mr. Ishihara was giving his opinion to American proposals to roll back Japanese exports to 1.5 million units a year for three years to help the depressed U.S. auto industry. In Washington, U.S. Trade Representative William Brock said Thursday the Reagan administration has decided not to support a bill that would limit imports of Japanese cars.

Mr. Brock, when asked about the bill at a meeting at the Kennedy Center, replied, "This administration has decided not to support legislation before congress, and rightly so."

Mr. Brock said that the administration had explained to Japan that the legislation has a fairly good chance of passing Congress.

He added: "I would be delighted to see them

[the Japanese] exercise prudence" by voluntarily limiting their exports of cars to the United States. But he added, "The Japanese have exercised no prudence at all" in this matter.

Mr. Ishihara, who also heads Nissan Motor, the maker of Datsun cars, said Japanese automakers were willing to hold down this year's exports to last year level of 1.82 million cars.

Japanese car exports captured 21 percent of the U.S. market in 1980 while U.S. automakers reported record losses. The flood of Japanese cars has prompted U.S. auto industry officials to demand that Japan cut its exports to give what Washington calls a "breathing space" to the U.S.

The U.S. Congress is debating bills setting a ceiling on Japanese car imports of between 1.4 million and 1.6 million units a year. "The Americans are free to say whatever level they want us to reduce our exports," Mr. Ishihara said. "But to us, it is out of the question for us to consider any figure below the 1.5 million level," he said.

He also said the Japanese automakers were ready to hold down their exports for one year only, instead of three years as reportedly demanded by the Americans.

Saburo Okita, Japan's chief trade negotiator. and Naohiro Amaya, vice-minister for interna-tional affairs, are due in Washington after April 20 for unofficial talks to head off demands in the U.S. Congress to impose the import curbs. Washington, United Auto Workers President Douglas Fraser said Wednesday his union will push for a law restraining Japanese auto imports if the administration's "tough talk" does not produce voluntary curbs. And Canada indirectly has asked Japan to tie voluntary limits on its car exports to Canada to vhatever concessions are made to the United States, Japanese government sources said Thursday.

The Canadians said their auto industry virtually was controlled by U.S. carmakers and for this reason it had been suffering from production cuts and increased unemployment.

Japanese auto exports to Canada rose to 158,400 in 1980 from the previous year's 60,000.

U.S. Economy Seen Slowing in Mid-1981

NEW YORK — The U.S. economic recovery, which has startled forecasters with its continuing strength, may be coming to an end, fighting inflation.

or so most analysts are guessing. Most forecasters had expected the economy to slow or even decline in the first three months of this year, partly because of the sharp increase in Social Security taxes. But according to the Com-merce Department's early esti-mate, inflation-adjusted gross national product actually rose at an annual rate of 5 percent in the first

"You don't have to be much of a forecaster" to say that the rapid growth of the first quarter will not continue in the second quarter, said Albert Wojnikower of First Boston. But you do have to be something of a forecaster to say how sharp the slowdown will be and how long it will last."

Blue Chip Economic Indicators, newsletter published in Sedona, Ariz., that each month polls about 40 leading forecasters, said a survey finds that the analysts on the average expect the nation's output of goods and services to decline at an annual rate of 0.7 percent in the current quarter.

Improvement Seen

Beginning in the third quarter, the Blue Chip forecasters said, the economy will be looking better. On the average, they expect real GNP to grow at an annual rate of 2.4 cent in the third quarter and at a rate of 3.9 percent in the fourth.

They rely heavily on a belief that President Reagan's tax cut proposal, or a revised version of it, will be enacted by then.

With regard to inflation and interest rates, the Blue Chip view is grimmer. On the average, the analysts expect the consumer price index to rise at a 9.3 percent rate in the fourth quarter — and at about the same pace in 1982. At last re-port, in February, the index was 11.3 percent above a year earlier; so the Blue Chip forecast would mark an improvement, though not so much of one as the Reagan administration would like. The administration predicted that the price index would rise only 8.25 percent next year. The forecasters on the average think that short-term interest rates will fall from the current level of about 14.25 percent to about 12 percent and then stay there the rest

The Fed is still setting a target range for federal funds, the excess reserves that banks lend to one another for short periods. The latest range known publicly is 15 to 20 Because banks have to maintain reserves against the deposits on their books, the level of their reserves helps to determine how aggressively they can create depo-sits, and add to the money supply, by making loans and investments. Therefore, moves to control the funds rate by adding to reserves or reducing them can conflict with what the Fed would like to see happen to the money supply. Thus in February, with no public announcement, the Fed decided that at times it would simply ignore its funds-rate target. Here are other reasons forecast-

NEW YORK - The annual For-

visit to the United States.

ractory Use Rises in U.S. The Associated Pres WASHINGTON - U.S. manu-over February's rate, the Federal Reserve Board reported Thursday. Much of the improvement reflects "a sizable increase, about 4.4 percentage points, in the operating rate for the motor vehicles and parts industry as output of cars and trucks rose 12.5 percent fur-

facturers operated at a seasonally adjusted rate of 79.5 percent of their capacity in March, an in-crease of 0.1 of a percentage point ther from the depressed rate early in the year," the report said. Overall manufacturing capacity utilization had dropped from 80 percent in January to 79.4 percent in February, the first decline after six straight monthly gains following last year's recession.

The February rate, originally reported at 79.3 percent, was revised in Thursday's report. The March figure is also subject to revision. The new report said the operating rate for producers of industrial materials was unchanged at 81.3 percent in March. It also said, "The utilization rate for the petroleum products industry fell substantially in March, reflecting the recent weakness in gasoline and fuel oil markets." In other specific categories, the report said operating rates declin-ed moderately for producers of food, chemicals, paper, aerospace and miscellaneous transportation equipment, instruments and stone, clay and glass. Utilization rates rose for rubber and plastics, iron and steel and fabricated metal.

LIVING WITH DEATH AND DYING By Elisabeth Kuebler-Ross. Macmillan. Illustrated, 181 pp. $10.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

BECAUSE death upstages everything most of us never think about all the small circumstances surrounding it, like the needs of the living, the relatives, the doctors and nurses. We are still naive about death, still in the grip of its mystery.

We won't be for long though, not if in "Living With Death and Dying," she campaigns, for example, for a "screening room" in the hospital where patients can go and screech their protests, or where they can try to sit down with death and swallow the idea of it like a meal. She thinks that surviving relatives should ste the dead-body, even if it is maillated or dislig-ured, so that there will be no ambiguny about it, so that death will take on a recognizable lace.

recognizable lace. Sometimes she seems a listle grotesque, even grisly, as she speaks of the joy of sharing the experience of death with a family, of how "enriching" this sharing is. She does not have a fortunate prote style or a thless have a fortunate prose style or a talent for imagery, so that her language has a kind of death-grip about it yet there is no question of her compe-tence, even brilliance, and of her sincerity. Certainly the introductory chapters, which she wrote without collaboration, are by far the best part of the book.

When asked about the fear of daying most people talk about separa-tion, pain, suffering, unfanished out-ness and their loved ones. Though this ness and their loved ones. NHL's Gretzky: Man-Child in the Promised Land

By Malcolm Moran

New York Times Service EDMONTON, Alta. — One of the nets was fas-tened to the goal line as usual, but the other had been pushed forward to center ice. The puck had been replaced by a yellow tennis ball. There was no crowd and no need for a referee, because the only purpose for raising a stick was to celebrate a goal.

There were more than 17,000 empty seats beyond the glass in the Northlands Coliseum, but this could have easily been a river in Ontario. It just happened that hundreds of thousands of television sets had shown this rink last Saturday night, when Wayne Gretzky's three goals led the Edmonton Oilers to a victory that climaxed a three-game sweep and eliminated the Montreal Canadiens from the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Fighting Words

Gretzky has remarked that in blitzing the Canadiens, Edmonton "beat the best team in hockey." The Oilers now meet the New York Islanders in the quarterfinals, and the defending Stanley Cup champions are not amused. "That ticks me off," said Islander forward Bob Nystrom. "If he considers Montreal the best team in hockey, we'll just have to go out and show him he's wrong." go out and show him he's wrong."

But now was a time for laughter, not hostility. Monday afternoon, during an optional skating pra-tice that became a children's game, Gretzky hardly stopped smiling as he moved. He stopped at the side of the net, his back to the goal line, waiting for Shanon Sather, the coach's 9-year-old son, to skate toward the cage.
When the ball went over the glass, Gretzky stood in the corner with Shanon and 6-year-old Justin Sather, who can reach a goal's crossbar with the top of his head only if he is wearing his thick helmet and only if he stands as straight as he can. The three young hockey players gave directions — "Over! Higher!" — until someone found the yellow

"Thank you," Gretzky said when it was returned. Self-Viewer

And when the game was over, Gretzky went inside, sat on the floor in front of the TV set that was showing a replay of Saturday's game and watched the Montreal Canadiens, as he had for years. This time the Canadiens lost, and it was Gretzky's Oilers

At the age of 20, his skills and the gifts that have allowed him to do what he does — imagination? anticipation? years of training and repetition? have been refined, and noticed more and more.

A year ago, he won the Hart Trophy as the National Hockey League's most valuable player and the Lady Byng Award as the player who best combines hockey skill and gentlemanly play. This season, before shocking the Canadiens and the NHL establishment, Gretzky set league records for points (164) and assists (109), becoming the first player to average more than 2 points a game.

Against the Canadiens, in the first game of the series, he tied playoff records for most points in a period (3) and a game (5). Then came his three goals that helped win the third game, 6-2. Of the 15 Oiler goals in the three games, Gretzky had a part

He was already a hockey veteran 10 years ago. That was before he went off to Toronto at 14 to escape the attention of a small town and play junior B hockey against 20-year-olds. That was before he had a secretary handle fan mail at 16. That was before he signed a contract reportedly worth $1.5 million with the Indianapolis Racers of the World Hockey Association at 17.

With Edmonton at 18, an age when most North Americans are just happy to get into a bar without phony IDs, Gretzky went to center ice, where in a ceremony one night there was a bottle of champagne and a new contract, estimated by some at $5 million, to extend the old one to 21 years, to 1999.

Action Between Periods

Before any of that, there was already the attention (complete with a newspaper mickname: the Great Gretzky) while he watched Guy Lafleur. Serge Savard and the others on Saturday nights and went outside to skate between periods.

There have been at least two significant changes. Ten years ago, when he watched the games on "Hockey Night in Canada," he could not watch himself. The other change is that in those days, at the end of the second period, the Great Gretzky had to go to bed.

Because he was such a small boy, the NHL could be no more than a dream in his childhood days. Still, the attention had already begun. Newspapers, wire services and television programs told of the 4-foot-4, 70-pound hockey player from Brantford, Ont. Buildings were filled for his games in novice class hockey.

هكذا من الأصل

"He was in demand like you wouldn't believe," said his father. Walter, a telephone company employee who still lives in Brantford. "The people would see him once in an area and they would always form their opinions on that one game."

That brought his father to a sad realization. "I felt sorry for him." he said. After all, his son was barely old enough to have grown his own perma-nent teeth, much less lose them in a hockey game. and already a monster had been created.

Father to Son

After Gretzky had played poorly in a tournament ame, the two went out to the family car, where the father gave his son a warning. "I said, 'Wayne, I'm going to tell you something."
"You can't be like anybody else anymore. You can't be normal and have a bad game. Every time you play a game now, everyone will expect miracles."

The expectations have never been higher, and the voices of the critics never louder. They still say he is too small, at 5-11 and 165. His shot is still not hard enough. He would not have as many points if he played for Montreal or for the Islanders.

Gretzky, among hockey's gods? Heresy, the critics say. Rocket Richard, he had fire. Jean Beliveau had grace. Bobby Hull had power and glamour. Gordie Howe had endurance - and those elbows. Bobby Orr could make thousands gasp as he went from end to end. Gretzky? He, they say, is just a

You know what I just read?" his father said. "They said, 'It's a shame a 20-year-old boy removes two legends, Esposito and Orr, from the record

'One of These Times, ...

Sometimes the talk makes Gretzky smile. Sometimes not: "One of these times - I can just feel it - I'm just going to explode and say what I think of people who say things about me."
He thought that the explosion might have hap pened this weekend after Richard Sevigny, a Montreal goaltender, had been quoted as having said that Lafleur would put Gretzky in his back pocket.

... in a typically elated post-goal pose.

Gretzky sighed at the reminder. "Why say that?" he said. "If Lafleur puts me into his back pocket, that's line. He's a great player. He's done that to 450 other players.

As the scores mounted in the first and last games, there were many opportunities for Gretzky to skate by Sevigny and leave a little reminder.

"I didn't," he said. "But I would have loved to. But I'd say, 'No. Why look bad? He wants you to look bad. He wants you to say that.' But one of

The 1833 Bandwagon

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — The 1833 League has launched its membership drive with the ceremonial horsewhipping of an editor through the streets of New York. It was a huge success.

Our purpose was to demonstrate the superiority of 1833 methods for dealing with slandeters. Operating under 1981 practices, we would have had to file suit against the rascal, wait five years for a vacant courtroom and pay lawyers $300,000 before having satisfac-tion of him.

Next time this Baker editor will think twice before calling the League "a bunch of ossified troglodytes.

Our goal - how many times do we have to repeat it? — is not to turn the calendar back but to move the United States forward to the glorious future that beckoned in 1833. After that year, the United States turned from the future and has ever since traveled the down-

The 1833 League will undo the hackwardness that has accumulated over the past 148 years by taking 1833 as the starting point for an American renewal. We are pleased to see that the new government has started to chop. Secretary of the Interior Watt's plan to give the public parks back to private business, for example, shows that our arguments are being heeded in Washington.

The League is not altogether happy with Watt's timid application of our philosophy, to be sure. Returning parks to private business suggests that he regards 1896 as the ideal year from which to start the country moving forward. The fact he ignores is that 1896 led inexorably to 1913 and the income

Our answer is that we are not absolutely dogmatic about 1833. There are several things at which we will want to take a long, hard look once we are in power. Slavery is one of them. So is whale oil. While whale oil will obviously rid us of dependence upon tyrannical foreigners to light the parlor, we also realize that whale-oil spills can make a mess of the carpet.

"What will happen to our mobile home if you plunge wildly ahead into 1833?" ask an elderly couple from Lincoln, Neb.

It is true that their mobile home will have to go. It is quite impossible to see how we can get on with 1833 so long as the prairie is filled with mobile homes. Our program calls for speckling the plains with little old sod shanties, although in wooded areas log cabins will be en-

Elderly folk have criticized the League's policy here. When you are elderly, they say, it is no longer easy to cut and stack the sod necessary to build a little old sod shanty on the plain. It is even harder, of course, to fell and raise the trees necessary to a log cabin.

Our answer is that, for those who can manage, the labor is well worth the effort. It not only builds character but also saves the cinzen from the murderous mortgage-interest rates required to pay some-one to do the sod-cutting and treefelling for you

In any case, this will not pose a significant problem for the elderly, since in 1833 there will be no antibiories. Yes, we will restore pneumonia the quinsy, the croup, Pott's disease and occasional dueling in defense of ladies' honor. (We will also restore ladies; it will create a boom in the fan industry and put hundreds of thousands of men to work manufacturing curling irons.)

Antibiotics being absent from 1833, the current problem of funding Social Security will evaporate and nursing-home scandals will cease to exist. For years, George Orwell's novel has conditioned us to look to 1984 as the terminal date of Western civilization. We in the League insist that there is nothing to fear about 1984 if it brings us a government with the grit to lead us into 1833. Keep those membership cards coming. New York Times Service drunkenly accuse someone of being interested in him only because of his father, when in fact the 'antagonist' did not even know who his father was," she writes in her book. "Later, at the same party, he said belligerently to someone else, "Don't you know who my father is?"

Miss Cronkite said her most disturbing encounter was with a young man she called S., the son of one of the pioneers of the women's rights movement. S., she said, had recently returned to one knew who he was. When asked how his mother's career had affected his decisions about his own career, he told Miss Cronkite: "I'm a man. Look at what my role model is — 2 leader of a militant women's organization. My father's not rich or famous at all, just an ordinary man. How do I use my mother as a role model? It doesn't make any sense. Not to me. Naturally. a kid would look to the most successful parent as a role model. Look what I've got. I have a lot of problems with it."

At the end of the interview, he turned his head away from Miss Cronkite and asked: "How did you learn to live with all the pain? And the rest of it?"

Miss Cronkite's two siblings. Nancy, 32, an actress and writer, and Chip, 24, a film editor, were also interviewed for the book. The three of them pretty much concluded that their parents, Walter and Betsy, had done everything right.

"The most important thing was that they loved us." Kathy Cronkite said. "I never had any doubt about my parents' love. I always felt that I could come home again, that the door was always open, that nothing I did would be so terrible that they would turn their backs on me."

Career and Marriage

Miss Cronkite currently lives in Houston with her second husband, Bill Ikard, a lawyer, But she said she spends almost as much time in New York and Los Angeles, pursuing her acting career. Her biggest roles so far have been as a revolutionary in the film "Network" and as a liberal lawyer in the short-lived television comedy series "Hizzonner." Her absences so far have not affected her one-year marriage, she said, "because Bill knew from the beginning that the most important thing to me is acting. My career is as important to both of us as his is. Besides, he's the most sincerely liberated man I've ever met

Miss Cronkite said that the term "struggling actress" accu-rately applies to her, even though her last name is Cronkite. That's the biggest misconception — the fact that everybody assumes that because you have a famous last name, you've got it made," she insisted. "It's just not true. Sometimes you may get in to meet somebody because of your name. But if you can't handle the part, you won't get the

The Italian government claims that actress Sophia Loren owes 685 million fire. (about $685,090) in back taxes, one of 200,000 Italian individuals and companies who are accused of owing a total of 1.6 trillion lire (about $1.6 billion). The Finance Ministry in Rome made public a list of the accused tax delinquents as part of an effort to crack down on tax evasion. Finance Minister France Revigion said most of the people on the list owe taxes from 1974, 1975 and 1976. The figure for the amount Miss Loren owes includes the years up to 1974, he said. The minister also listed other itahan actresses and actors, most of whom are not well known outside of Italy, an Italian bank, several construction companies and several oil companies as owing large amounts of money. Mass Loren, who lives in Paris, was sensenced to 30 days in jail and fined 12 million line last summer on charges that her legal advisers feiled to file a tax return for her in 1963. She has not served the sentence, but her lawyers quoted her last summer as saying she was willing to return to Italy and go to jail if necessary.

that former heavyweight champion Joe Louis, who died earlier this week, be buried in Arlington National Cemetery. Reagan waived restrictions which normally would have barred the famed boxer from being buried in the nation's most historic national cemetery. Louis served in the U.S. Army in World War II, but his activities were limned essentially to entertaining the troops with boxing demonstrations and, so far as is known, he did not see combat. Those normally eligi-ble for burial in Arlington include holders of medals for bravery, distinguished service or was wou members of the armed forces who die on active duty; retired career military personnel; members of the armed forces disabled while on active duty and honorably dis-charged veterans who also had served in high federal government posts. The wives and minor chaldren of those who qualify also may be buried in the cemetery. There are now 176,000 graves in Arlington Cemetery. The cemetery area was expanded several years ago to add about 100,000 gravesites.
